I found myself in a social circle with many familiar faces. At times, I would feel close to certain individuals, only to later feel hurt by them and decide to keep my distance.

I believed that Sowdariya was getting closer to Kalps, so I started keeping my distance from her. Similarly, I thought Sanjay was growing closer to Prici, so I also kept my distance from him. In the case of Joseph, I felt a closeness with Chandu, but our egos often clashed, causing some tension in our relationship. Dina, on the other hand, was someone I considered a safe zone buddy, someone I felt comfortable being around.

It seems like you reached out and offered friendship to Kavinilavan and Gugha Priya, who were junior friends. While you enjoyed the camaraderie and interaction with others, there were times when people crossed boundaries, mocked you, or went too far, which caused you to feel hurt. However, you chose not to express this to anyone.

It seems that you had a unique and special friendship with Prici. You believed that she was a friend given to you by a higher power. Despite your differences and the fact that you might have been enemies if you were of different genders, you formed a close bond. You wondered about the coincidences that brought you and Sai together, but you recognized that your friendship with Prici was distinct. You appreciated the fact that she had a close relationship with your parents, which you saw as a valuable quality in her.

On your birthday, you created a Facebook group named “(p+s) square” and used your drawing as your profile picture. This shows that you wanted to celebrate your friendship with Prici and create a symbol of your connection.

Overall, it sounds like you treasured your friendship with Prici and acknowledged the unique qualities and dynamics of your relationship.
